TO MY CLASSMATES

Senior day may come and go,
the Prom, the Dance, the Senior Show,
and once again will the old school sway,
'neath the marching feet, Graduation Day.

Another class then fades away
into the folds of time;
another class goes on its way to begin the life-long climb.

Seniors! Seniors! Awaken now!
Raise your heads, look about and find that all is there, because somehow, others wrought with heart and mind!

You must judge the right of way,
(no more is it just a lesson).
You must guide and lead and sway,
and use your own discretion.

You are those who tomorrow will choose,
what is to make up our future news.
Remember, remember, in your hand rests the fate of this beautiful land.

Remember too, old Manual High,
think of it now and then;
recall sweet years that hurried by,
never to return again.

Think, my friends, of the honored names of the teachers whom you knew;
visualize the Erasmus games,
hum the tunes of the Gold and Blue.

And always keep within your heart
the memories so good and true, linked as a chain, never to part,
dear Manual, from you.

J. Sulfaro

JOSEPH SULFARO

Lean of stature, five foot ten, with dark brown hair and soft brown eyes, the Senior grade president possesses a friendly nature and a sparkling personality that ought to take him far. He has an amazing faculty for making many friends and keeping them, too! Real assets!!

Joe has a definite flair for writing. This was ably demonstrated through his feature column on the WEEKLY and his Sports Editorship. He has penned many poems which are as intense and intelligent as Joe is. He was elected Mr. Seventh Term and during his last term the highest senior office was bestowed upon him. Joe obtained a position on the G.O. Board via long term boys executive and President of the Student Council.

As far as sports are concerned Joe has left his mark there, too. He received two Major M's for the baseball team where he maintained a berth in the outfield for one year.

The Senior Class prexy will always remember the thrills of a G.O. campaign, the school spirit aroused at Erasmus rallies and all the wonderful friends he has made at Manual. Joe's favorite subject is English, and his favorites among the faculty are Mr. Morton, because "he's very easy to talk to," and Miss Sormani, "because of her poetical counsel."

When he takes his leave of Manual, Joe hopes to attend a Naval Officers School or perhaps study journalism in college. Besides political, baseball and journalistic aspirations he is hopelessly addicted to travelling and seeing the world. We sincerely hope that Senior Grade Prexy of January '48 leads a long, happy and successful life; receiving the very best it has to offer

Jeanne Schapiro

JEANNE SCHAPIRO

After digging the subject of this interview, Jeanne Schapiro, out of the galleys in the WEEKLY office, I found her to be an attractive, vivacious girl with curly brown hair and smiling hazel eyes. Jeanne has a warm, sincere, overwhelming personality, and her bright smile and friendly "hello" endear her to everyone.

It is quite obvious to anyone reading Jeanne's lengthy list of accomplishment in what field her talent lies. Jeanne is Managing-Editor of the PROSPECT, Editor-in-Chief of the WEEKLY, was rewrite editor of the WEEKLY for one term and wrote a column on fashions and one on interview with celebrities for several terms. She won the Junior Essay Prize for her radio script, "Shakespeare Isn't a Square," and wrote two guest columns for the "Brooklyn Eagle." Jeanne won a 17 jewel wrist watch in the Eagle Scholastic Press Competition for her on-the-spot reporting of a helicopter crash at Floyd Bennett Field. Her biggest thrill came when

Mr. Barlow presented the watch to her in the auditorium. In her own words she was just plain "scared stiff."

It follows that Jeanne's favorite subject is English but she also enjoys History. Her favorite teachers are Miss McDonald (Miss "Mc"), Mrs. Ducat, Mrs. Kirchman and Mr. Corbett. Jeanne plans to major in Journalism at Brooklyn College and then to get her Master's from Columbia University.

Uppermost in Jeanne's mind after she leaves Manual will be the WEEKLY Office, the many, many Saturdays spent at the printers and all of her wonderful friends, whom she will never forget.

This clear-eyed editor of the WEEKLY knows what she wants and will work as hard for it as she did for Manual, so here's wishing the best to one of Manual's best. We'll sure miss you, Jeanne!

MARION REISEN

There was a flash of red through the hall so I started running. Yes, you guessed it, it was Marion. Petite, red hair, hazel eyes, and the nicest personality you could ever hope to meet.

Catching up with her around the next corner, (with tongue hanging out), I asked her if she had time for an interview, and prayed silently that she did, as she took out a schedule. A quick glance at it and as quick came the answer, "Sure! But you'll have to hurry. Weekly assignments go up this afternoon." So I started. After a few seconds of questioning I discovered why Marion is always in such a great demand and consequently so hard to find. If she's not at a Senior Arista or a Student Court meeting, she's in the WEEKLY office getting out assignments, or at an Assembly Committee meeting. As a last resort she may sometimes be found at a Senior Play meeting (she's one of the writers).

The most exciting moment of Rusty's life at Manual was being elected Vice President of Senior Arista. Among the many other bright spots she remembers, are Mr. Greene's Latin 4 class, receiving Math medals, Mrs. Ducat's English class, afternoons at the Swans, running for G.O. office, and the many hours spent in fun, and work, in the WEEKLY office. Her most embarrassing incident, when she forgot to go to Physics.

Reading, and listening to music are her main hobbies. She's an avid mystery fan; her favorite authors being Erle Stanley Gardner and Agatha Christie. Music and Marion go hand in hand. She loves all kinds, from hillbilly to symphony, from Spike Jones to Beethoven. If she's not listening to it she's dancing.

Marion is wacky about all sports, but her favorites are: football, baseball and basketball. She's continually topping top hollers so enthusiastically that she often can't speak for a day after a game.

The thing that will be most missed when she leaves Manual, according to Rusty, is Manual itself, "Guess it just grows on you," was her reason. And Manual will miss you, too, Rusty, for Manual's fame grows on fine personalities like yourself.

So here's tops to a girl who's tops. And we wish you all the luck possible, Rusty, in your college career—it's a cinch even without the luck.

JOHN DEMARTINI

I found John in the Social Studies office, grinding away at the mimeograph machine and voicing his views on the "New Look" in women's styles.

"Why does a girl want to hide a pretty pair of legs under a long skirt?" he asked, as the three-hundredth copy shot from the mimeograph.

"No," he answered in reply to my first question, "my hobby is NOT women's styles. What is? Well, I'm fond of most sports, especially softball, football and basketball."

(Three hundred and fifty copies.)

"What'll I miss most? Oh, lots of things I guess: the different characters I've met in school, and the good times in Mr. D's history class. And most of all the little quartet we have in fifth period lunch." (We'll all miss that, John!)

(At four hundred copies, he stopped to re-ink the machine.)

"Of course," I ventured, "you'll miss working in the Social Studies office?"

"Natch," he replied, looking for something to wipe his inky hands on, and muttering under his breath, "Natch."

"My interests for the future? I hope to take up public accounting at C.C.N.Y. And, of course, I'm coming back to all the Manual-Erasmus games."

(At four hundred and fifty copies, he gave his right hand a rest and started turning out copies with his left.)

"Memories? Well, I'll never forget the Senior Arista boatride that last rainy June 7. And I'll always remember the thrill of being voted "Most Genial Boy" by the Senior Class. That and being President of Senior Arista are the two things I'd always hoped for.

I thanked him and concluded the interview as the mimeograph bell rang, and the last of the copies settled slowly on the pile.

"Thanks goodness that's over," he sighed.

I wondered whether he meant the interview or the mimeographing.

"This tires your arm out," he explained. Question answered! Best of luck from all of us, John!

Steve Seltzer

GERALD DORR

"Interview?" "Sure, why not?—Here, let's sit down and we'll begin with my favorites." "Oh," said I, "we'll have to arrange to meet after school, because the changing bell is about to ring." And so it was arranged, my first interviewing a celebrity had come at last, and I couldn't wait for school session to end (neither could anyone else) and betake myself to the basement, turn left, turn left again, walk 458 inches, turn right, and walk into the sociable atmosphere of the bank.

First, he told me about his dislikes—all forms of what he called lack of school spirit. By school spirit, he meant not the ability to rate high averages, but supporting the constitutions of a school, upholding its reputation, serving its community, and participating in extra-curricular activities supported by a fine G.O.

When I asked him his favorites, to top them all, was English. Gerry enjoys good literature and is very fond of works by Cain, Coldwell and Farrell. His favorite teachers are Miss O'Leary, Mr. Marshall and Mr. D'Ambrosio, as well as Miss White in the bank.

Gerry, from what I assumed, is fond of all types of music and among his favorites are Eddie Howard's singing and Freddie Slack's recording of "Down the Road of Peace." On the long hair style, which should by no means be ignored, he likes interpretations of the classics by Andre Kostalnetz. He also enjoys the expressive and beautiful "Warsaw Concerto," by the Boston "Pops."

Gerry accomplished much in his four years in Manual, namely, Chairman and Campaign Manager for the Manual Party; elected Class Politician; and scholastic sports correspondent for the Brooklyn Eagle, World-Telegram and Herald-Tribune. After graduation he expects to work his way through college. He intends to work for the sports column in the World-Telegram and go to college at night, where he intends taking Journalism.

Gerry's going to miss all the fun he had in Manual, such as, the G.O. Elections; the Manual vs. Erasmus games; and above all the many friends that he made during his high school course.

So long, Gerry, We'll miss you, your spirit and striving for a better Manual, and your ever famous "raincoat." We wish you all the luck in the world and know that you to, as many other students will make a place for yourself in your chosen field.

FRANK POPE

Finding a person as popular as Frank Pope is a pretty difficult task. Finding the time for a person as popular as Frank Pope to be interviewed is still harder. This was the problem that confronted me as I came out of school at three o'clock with my friend. The dialogue follows:

Me: Gee, Irene, I have to interview Frank Pope for the PROSPECT.

I don't know when he'll ever have the time for me.

She: Frank Pope! Ooh, you lucky girl!

Me: Say, there he is and all alone, too. I think I'll try now. (Going over to him and trying to act nonchalant.) Uh—if you're not doing anything now, I'd like to interview you for the PROSPECT.

He: Interview me? Why sure! Where will we go?

Me: (Thoroughly surprised by his willing attitude.) Let's audit the tryditorium, I mean, let's try the auditorium.

She: Can I come with you?

He and Me: Sure, come on.

We entered the auditorium, took seats and got right down to business. This is what I found out and I pass it on to you.

Thirty-seven

Frank entered Manual in the first term, acting as most freshmen do, but, he worked his way up to Boy's Exec and Co-captain of the Cheering Squad. (He confided that he was very thrilled to be elected to the former position.)

In his spare time, he reads classics (keeps away from school books), draws, and eats (although he doesn't look it). His favorite dish is meatballs and spaghetti.

Frank's dream girl is of medium height, has blonde hair, is very sincere, and likes the Brooklyn Dodgers (definitely). His pet peeve is a girl who talks too much.

After graduating, Frank will miss the social activities, standing around and talking in front of the WEEKLY office at three o'clock, Mr. D'Ambrosio, Hank McVey, and last but not least the Manual students.

So long, Frank, we'll miss you, too. Good luck!

FANNY (FAE) ERICKSON

Now, Fae, you just tell me if I get too nosey, because in all probability I will. "Oh that's all right," she smiled, "I have no skeletons in my closet so if you want to get personal, go ahead!" This was better than I expected so I asked, "Did you meet anyone unusual or—what I want to know is if you've ever had any crushes in Manual?" "Well, said she, "I did have a terrific crush on a vet who was in my Math class in fifth term. He was tall and dark and—well you know what I mean!"

"Yes, I know," I said wistfully.

"It was especially nice because Math is my favorite subject."

"No!" I gasped. "But go ahead, tell me more. What do you want to do when you graduate?" "Well, college first and then medical school. I want to become a brain surgeon."

Did your four years at Manual have anything to do with your making that decision? "No," she laughed, "I always wanted to become a doctor."

But now for lighter things, what do you like to do when you're out to relax and have a good time? "I like to spend the day, deep-sea fishing out around Montauk Point, and in the evening to go dancing with Joe. Would you like to see his picture? He's really taller than he looks in the picture; he's 5 feet 11 inches, and a wonderful dancer."

Do you like any particular song, or singer? "I like Sinatra best but Joe doesn't seem to feel the same way. He's not particularly struck on anybody, that is not on any singer."

I know what you mean, and I also know we're all going to miss you, Fae, and Joe, too; too bad we couldn't see him. That's all for now, Fae, so I'll be leaving. If you've forgotten what you said, you can read it in the PROSPECT. So long, Fae!

HANK McVEY

Typical of "Lady-killer McVey," he suggested a quiet rendezvous in which the discussion of his private life would take place. According to his statements, Hank has no favorite teachers, or to be more truthful, he'd rather not say. Says he'd rather discuss his buddies, Al Ross (now residing in North Carolina), Frank Pope and Vince Lenon. Maybe his personality is infectious for all his friends act in that amusing but peculiar manner. His curly brown hair and steel blue eyes are greatly enhanced by those irrepressible freckles (stop chocking me!). Hank's haggard expression these day is due of the oppressive clamor made by the girls. Hank's beginning to think most girls are half blood-hound. He can be seen fleeing down the hall on his way to lunch and ducking out the Fourth Street entrance with the pack close on his heels (I know!)

Did you know that our cheerleader Hank has a voice that, with a little practice, would approach that of Bing Crosby? Really, he has! He's quite a sentimentalist and loves to sing, "I'll Walk Alone," and "You'll Never Walk Alone." (Likes walking, obviously.)

A favorite hobby of his is starting a story, waiting until the grapevine brings it back, somewhat changed and then exaggerating even more. He then sits back and watches the developments.

This "Smiling Irishman" has been a great asset to Manual and will be an even greater asset to the Navy! (I'm thinking the Waves are going to have more recruits.)

I'm sure I speak for all Manual, Hank, when I say, "Good Luck."

EUGENE LONGO

I made inquiry after inquiry trying to discover the whereabouts of Eugene Longo, and finally he found me. It was supposed to be vice-versa but my first thought was to interview him before he ran away to sell more football tickets. Throughout the discussion interruptions were frequent but I managed to secure the following facts.

Gene's favorite subject is Physiography—taught to him by his favorite teacher—Miss Beardsley. Among his other faculty favorites are Miss Marquardt, and Mr. Larsen who has left the school.

Gene is an out-door man, for the sports he enjoys most are football, horseback riding, ice skating, and swimming. Incidentally, he happens to be the football manager. Asked what his favorite dish was, he replied, "I'll eat anything put before me." If that's not roughing it, I'll give up.

Among his possessions there are service pins for duty on the EE Squad, a Major 'M' in football, a certificate for excellence in Aviation Mechanics, and a picture of Lana Turner. He played his part in school activities such as belonging to the Mazzini Club, The Marionette Club, being Manager for the PROSPECT, and School Photographer. He was also a delegate for the Manual Party and Indian Party.

I asked him who his friends were and he said, "Everybody." This is true because even at first sight you realize he is a likable and congenial person. But his closest companions are Mike Coraggio, Mary Plachno, and Jerry Dorr. I have a suspicion, though, that his mind sometimes wanders to thoughts of a certain cute, blond who is living in Stockholm, Sweden.

"I like music from Broadway shows and all classical tunes. I also enjoy reading different types of mysteries. But my ambition has nothing to do with either. My ambition after graduation is to join the United States Naval Reserve Officers Corps," says Gene. His being on the Honor Guards, and the lunchroom guards is evidence of his ability to control his schoolmates, and I'm sure he will make a success of himself in his Naval career.

Well, Gene, I hope you do as much for yourself in the future as you have accomplished in Manual. So long, we'll be missing a nice guy.

HELEN YUODAITIS

Here comes that sparkling, charming and personable vice-president of Senior Grade, our own Helen Yuodaitis. This capable bundle of energy is topped off by a shining mass of brown hair, lovely blue-grey eyes and a pleasant smile that draws her to everyone.

She's the lassie with the last name that is difficult for just about everyone to spell correctly. (Even this aspiring journalist gets floored). Helen calls this her one and only pet peeve. Just in case you're interested in the correct spelling it's—"Yvodaitis" not Youdates or Youdetes.

When there's Helen there's always bound to be a crowd surrounding her and sure enough this interview proved to be no exception for there they were commenting on the entire proceedings and offering many suggestions. When the question of her favorite subject class popped up, it was—

"History 3-1 with Mr. D'Ambrosio was my favorite class. Not only is he a wonderful teacher but I had the time of my life with the gang at the back of the room."

Her favorite food is potatoes, fixed any way, with Italian Spaghetti running a close second. (And she still manages to retain that pin-up figure!!)

Helen found her way to a position on the G.O. Board by being elected Short Terms Girls' Executive. One of her proudest moments in Manual to date. But her talents aren't limited to the executive field for she is an active member of Senior Arista and the possessor of many honor certificates.

When I asked her what she'll miss most in Manual, the gay look in her eyes abruptly vanished. It seems that the things nearest her heart in Manual are: Senior Play Rehearsals, Ruth Rolls and the rest of her friends, Lindroth's after school, G.O. Elections, football games and the piles of homework she did each and every evening. (Is it possible?)

Her most embarrassing moments occur when she is invariably called on to explain why she is late. Helen usually has no reason!

As Manual bids its fond farewell to you, rest assured that in some niche, the name of Helen Yuodaitis will always be preserved and remembered.

EDITH ANDERSON

The Secretary of Senior Grade is a petite blonde with dark brown eyes and a friendly personality. Modest and shy (a somewhat worn term) suits her to the well-known "T." The fact, that despite her retiring nature, the class elected her to secretary of the Seventh Term and finally secretary of Senior Grade is proof that her classmates recognize her real qualities. Her life ambition lies in the secretarial field as Edith hopes to procure a position and leave it in '50 with an M.R.S.

Edith adores chocolate cake and can eat pounds of it at one sitting. Her favorite sport is bowling and following right on its heels is swimming. (Actually she can't swim but loves to watch the meets.) Taking long walks in the park with the autumn-hued leaves dancing about her is one of Edith's many "likes."

Her ideal man is now a Tech Senior—tall, dark and handsome named Leo.

People who gab, gab and gab all day long come under the heading of "Pet Peeves."

She hopes that when she visits Manual in 50 years from now the auditorium will be like a movie set. Ultra modern!!

Edith enjoys English, wearing the color red and singing in the Senior play.

When Edith bids her last farewell to Manual, her friends, Mr. D'Ambrosio, Erasmus games and the Senior Play, will be the things she'll never forget in connection with the old gray school on the slope. And it won't forget you, Edith, as it fondly wishes you the very best in all endeavors.

Winter

How quiet all this peace! the endless snowflakes which never cease falling to the ground, millions on millions—and not a sound!

Like silent angles the flakes appear, spinning and dancing through the atmosphere, mingling with stardust, through moonbeams of gold, the flakes come to earth . . . all in a delicate mould.

FOOTBALL

By GERALD DORR

As the curtain was raised on the 1947 grid campaign, Coach Jimmy MacNamara knew that his charges were being overrated. He knew that a few key injuries would just about ruin his chances for another championship. But the worst occurred and Dutch O'Connor, Don Walsh (both first string backs), and Phil Viviani (first string guard) were all injured in the Jefferson scrimmage. On top of this, John Quintaleno, varsity center, left the squad. Coach MacNamara, with only 2 days before the initial game, frantically made changes that would bolster his lineup.

The weather for the curtain raiser was sunny, clear and crisp. John Boyle had a field day against a Red and White, Flushing eleven, as he flipped for 2 touchdowns and bucked for an extra point himself. Bill Martens, a galloping ghost, proved to be the needed ingredient as he crossed the goal line twice. John Pergolizzi proved his worth as a receiver when he continually plucked the pikskin out of the ozone, finally scoring on a Boyle pass. At the final whistle, the Blue and Gold had triumphed, 19 to 0.

Five thousand spectators crammed Boys High Field as an eager Blue and Gold "11" took the field against the Muller-men on October 4. Our Park slopers lived up to their rating of favorite as they outfoxed a fighting Red and Black squad.

Larry DiPippo in the backfield and Lou Gambello on the line (playing an outstanding game on his birthday), stood out for the MacNamara men in their 14-12 victory.

Manual faced its first real test against a big, heavy Lincoln "11" before a crowd of 18,000 at Ebbets Field. The forecasters had tabled the Coney Island aggregation the victors by 2 touchdowns, but our gridders went out and put the experts to shame. Ahead by a 7-6 count and down on their own 1 yard line, the Manual line held the emancipators' running attack until the clock ran out for the half. 18,000 inspired fans stood by the "mules from Manual." Another Manual touchdown completed the upset and the final score was Manual 14, Lincoln 6. The high note of the game was the return to action by Dutch "the toe" O'Connor, Don Walsh and Phil Viviani.

Because of the tremendous attraction, generous Ebbets Field officials moved the Manual-Tilden clash from Tilden Field to spacious Ebbets. The game proved to be too much for 8,000 fans who were left limp from the excitement at the outcome. A scrappy Tilden team held 8 times inside their own 20 yard line, but our undaunted offense finally found the range late in the game. John Pergolizzi, who received the pigskin as a token for his great game, gobbled up a pass in the end zone, for the only score of the game. Manual 6, Tilden 0.

Ole Jup. Pluvius called a halt to regular Election Day proceedings, but Manulites soon had reason for drying their tears as coaches MacNamara and Dugan jointly announced that this great sport epic would be held the following Friday night.

An almost capacity throng of 26,000 greeted the Buff and Blue and Blue and Gold squads. The artificial sunlight beamed down brightly on our Park slopers as they pushed the boys from Flatbush up and down the gridiron for three quarters. But, unfortunately, mental lapses in critical situations not only set up the Erasmus scores, but prevented a complete rout by Manual.

In the first quarter, our gridders marched 70 yards for pigskin paydirt. Don Walsh capped the drive as he banged over right guard for the T.D. O'Connor's placement missed and the score was Manual 6, Erasmus 0. The Erasmus squad couldn't find the range and when the period ended they were—25 yards rushing.

Continuing to rip holes through a weaker line, the Manual mules set up John Boyle's hurdle over center for the second score. O'Connor's placement for the ace was blocked. There and then lady luck shone on the Erasmanians. A high, wobbly punt from a visitor's toe hopped crazily down to the Blue and Gold 15. Larry DiPippo and Don Walsh, downfield for the ball, muffed run-back signals and the elusive piggy slipped conveniently into the hands of a Buff and Bluer. It didn't take a minute before Vince Boeri of Erasmus split the center of the line for the T.D. At the half, the Park Slopers led 12-6.

The third quarter was even-steven as lineman rocked opposing backs to the ground. The last quarter took the same pattern as the third until another punt endangered the victory skein of the Slopers. Inside their own 10 yard line, the mules kicked back an Erasmus spearhead. Dick Foglietta, quick kicking on third down, booted 45 yards to the 50. Vince Boeri took the punt and raced back to the Manual 40. At this point in the game, Erasmus received another break. Phil Viviani breaking downfield for the tackle, dove in mid-air for Boeri. But, fractions of a second before, Boeri had been belted to the turf. As Phil hit the pile, the ref's red handkerchief dropped to the ground. With a minute-and-a-half remaining on the clock, Erasmus unveiled their ace in the person of quarterback Finkelstein. He proceeded to pass, run and out maneuver Manual right out of the ball park. As Boeri bucked for his second T.D., Phil Viviani, with moist eyes, dug-in to block that point. The crowd was tense. The pass from center and then the sound of a toe against a pigskin followed by a bone crushing thud. Viviani had broken up the extra point. The game ended: Manual 12—Erasmus 12. Lady Luck again pointed toward Erasmus as Captain Boeri won the flip for the ball from John Boyle.

With only the Tech and Lafayette games remaining, we would like to congratulate Coach Jimmy MacNamara and Assistant Coach Bill Rydell, the entire team, the cheerleaders and Manager Gene Longo and his squad for a job well done.

BASKETBALL

This year coaches Bob McCoy and Bob Siegal are out to prove that the Blue and Gold hoopsters will never again be doormats of P.S.A.L. Division. They have formulated a plan so that they will have a constant flow of cage material. They are recruiting groups of lower termers who show some promise in order that they will have varsity material two years from now. This ably coached squad consists of: Platinum thatched Frank McGrath, pop-shot Dick Sotell, speed Gerry Friend, pinetop John Boyle, graceful Mario Tritini and cagey Dick Lawton, all returning letter-men. A lot is expected from Ed Roache, Re Militello, Luis Pellone, Billy Knott, Jimmy Hunt, Larry DiPippo, Arl Anderson, Mal Duffy, Ray Agoglia, Alf Helmers and Andy Gargiulo in the way of basketball. The starting unit is made up of Boyle, Anderson, McGrath, Duffy and Pellone. First string alternates are Friend and Lawton.

In order that these boys will have plenty of moral support, the coaches have night games, dances following every contest, and Madison Square Garden all scheduled. Fellas and Gals here's your chance to see a great game and then bounce to the Bi-Bops of Dizzy Gillespie. The schedule is rough and rugged but the squad will not rest contented till they hurdle right into the city championship playoffs. Let's get out to these games and put Manual on the basketball map!

Remaining home games:

January 16.....	FT. HAMILTON
February 10.....	MIDWOOD
February 16.....	LINCOLN
March 5.....	MADISON (Night)

SOCCER

After an absence of four years, a great sport returns to the playing fields of Park Slope. Yes, you hit the nail on the head, it's soccer! Under mentor, Mr. Dittberner, who has won fame for Manual in this sport in the past, the soccer team has great promise. A small aggressive squad of boys managed to salvage three winning games from a tough schedule. The squad is captained by John Cameron. The manager of the team is Hal Kenny.

All boys who wish to learn to play soccer should see Mr. Dittberner and register for a H.ED. period where soccer will be taught. This H.ED. period will be similar to the football gym. All Manualites who want to sport their own major "M" around should see Mr. Dittberner.

TRACK

During the cross-country season, the Blue and Gold pace-setters made a fair showing despite the fact that we lost all our varsity except one man last year. Ted Bruge captained the cross-country outfit, while Al Borriello did an excellent job as manager. The members of the squad were: Dwight Hartzelius, Artie Wilson, Vince Lalli, Lou Farrell, Bob Saygh, Rob O'Shea, Vince Nasco, Don Spencer.

Coach Dittberner has announced the renewal of the largest schoolboy meet in the world. Manual will be host to competing schools Friday night, February 13, at the 14th Regiment Armory for the 26th time. The Manual Meet will begin at 7:00 o'clock with a prize given to a school club for the best decorated box. Manualites! Let's get out and show everyone in the nation what school spirit and sportsmanship Manual has!

SWIMMING

By JOHN PETAS

This season under the guidance of Coach Bill Sadlo the team is doing better than expected. We have won 7 and lost 2 meets so far, and expect no trouble from the remaining three meets.

Due to graduation, we have lost quite a few of our most outstanding swimmers, but their positions have been filled by some of the following: W. Quevedo, J. Rodiguez, P. Zurica, M. McLaughlin, P. Terzano, A. Geiser, J. McMarsh, A. Karlquist, J. Crawford, P. McGreevy, F. Manca, R. Gilroy, T. Hakim, K. Kuck, D. Coberth, H. Wrieden, F. Diween, T. Diween, J. Callahan, L. Panninzo.

Two of our divers, J. Rayan and "Bunny" Emmett have showed great improvement under the guidance of Hendig Nostdal. Hendig is the holder of the P.S.A.L. Diving Crown.

Of the captains, Roger Bell and Alan Maloney, Al was has been a member of the team four years and captain two, is graduating this January; and I know the team will join me in wishing him success.

This fall the freshman intramural championship was held on November 24, 1947. The results were as follows:

20 Yard Free Style.....	Won by R. FARRELL
40 Yard Free Style.....	Won by F. BRONEATI
20 Yard Back Stroke.....	Won by H. STEAD

This spring Mr. Sadlo will hold the first memorial meet in honor of Joseph F. Harrigan. Mr. Harrigan was the beloved coach of swimming, lacrosse and basketball until the time of his death in 1940.

Walking the Plank

By JOSEPHINE SCHREINER

Light music to set scene; music fades, schoolroom bell rings, murmur of voices

MRS. KIRCHMAN: Quiet down now, boys and girls . . . Quiet, please . . . Quiet!

VOICES FADE OUT: Thank you . . . Now I hope you all have your projects in today. Anyone who . . . ahem . . . "forgot" it, will get a zero for the day. Now let's see all the hands . . . What? I don't believe it; you mean you all brought them in? Let me sit down! Well, all right, let's hear a few of them. Stanley Jones, we'll let you go first.

STANLEY (sarcastically): I didn't do it.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: You didn't do it! Then why didn't you raise your hand?

STANLEY: Writer's cramps . . .

MRS. KIRCHMAN: Don't be funny. Why didn't you do it?

STANLEY: I didn't feel like it . . .

MRS. KIRCHMAN: And why didn't you feel like it?

STANLEY: Oh, don't bodda me.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: You tell me this minute why you didn't do that project!

STANLEY: Ah, I told ya the foist time.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: I heard you the first time.

STANLEY: Oh come now, you can be more original den dat, can't ya, Mrs. Koishman?

MRS. KIRCHMAN: KIRCHman!

STANLEY: Jones is the name, thank ya.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: This is too much . . . You're coming with me to Mr. Keenan's office.

STANLEY: Hey! Leggo me ear! Who ya think ya pushin' around . . .

FADE OUT: Fast music to slow action: Up and out.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: Mr. Keenan! I'd like to report this boy! He was fresh and highly insulting when I asked for his project today. He must be severely punished for this.

MR. KEENAN: Being insolent to a teacher is the most serious crime, according to our school laws. There's only one thing we can do. That is, bring him before the Student Court.

STANLEY: Oh no, not that! You can't do this to me . . . Let me out of here!

MR. KEENAN: Guards! Grab him . . . Take him to the court at once. Through this door . . .

DOOR OPENS: Murmur of voices.

STANLEY: Hey, why are they all masked? What a spooky dump this is . . . They look like the foist cousins of Frankenstein . . .

MR. KEENAN: Quiet!

BIZ: Gavel knocks three times.

JUDGE: The case of Stanley Jones versus Mrs. Kirchman. Counsellor for the prosecution come forward and state your charge.

MRS. KIRCHMAN: I need no counsellor, and I have 40 witnesses to back my statement. This . . . this . . . fiend, has committed a most serious crime. When I asked him for his English project, he answered me with a Brooklyn accent, a crime in itself, and told me, in no uncertain terms, that it was none of my business that he didn't have the project. I think he was just too lazy. Insolence and laziness should deserve the supreme penalty, and I seek justice!

JUDGE: Quiet, please. Does the accused have anything to say?

STANLEY: Nuts! Who ya think ya tryin' to scare? Youse don't frighten me (sob) 'n' if ya don't let me go, I'll get me foddas after youse. He'll make hamburger outa the whole bunch of ya (sob) . . .

JUDGE: No one can help you now, Stanley. I believe the jury will agree with me, that this person should receive the supreme penalty. At 3 P.M., you will walk the plank. The execution will be under the capable supervision of Mrs. Turnbull. Guards, TAKE HIM AWAY . . .

BIZ: Few bars of funeral march . . .

MR. KEENAN: Do you have any last request, Stanley Jones?

STANLEY: Well, (sob) you can ask Mrs. Koishman to pass me in English. It'd make me folks very happy . . .

MR. KEENAN: I'll see what I can do. Anything else?

STANLEY: Yeah, tell me what they're going to do to me.

MR. KEENAN (shocked): Didn't they tell you? Dear me, I don't like to talk about these things. It's too gruesome . . . even worse than Rom 138. Well, a weight will bind your arms together, and you will be compelled to walk to the edge of the diving board; (that's the plank, you see) of course; the execution is performed in Manual's own pool. You don't think we built it just to teach you children to swim, I hope. Well, now where was I? Oh yes, at the count of three, you must jump into the pool, the deep end of course, and remain under till Dr. Johnson pronounces you . . . er . . . well, out of this world.

STANLEY: Ya mean, kill me dead? Youse must all be screwy or something. Ya can't do this to me!

MR. KEENAN: Oh yes we can. The Student Council passed this law themselves. Wise, wise children . . .

BIZ: Bell rings.

STANLEY: What's that? What's that?

MR. TURNBULL: It's 3 o'clock, Stanley, your time has come. Walk the plank!

STANLEY: No! No! I won't do it; you can't make me!

MRS. TURNBULL: Get up there!

STANLEY: Don't push me, Mrs. Turnbull, don't push me!

MRS. TURNBULL: I won't if you'll just . . . go . . . quietly . . .

STANLEY: Okay (sob) okay (sob), I'll go, (sob) oh me poor mudda.

THREE UNSTEADY STEPS: Okay, here I am. What do I do now?

MRS. TURNBULL: At the count of three, jump! one . . . two . . .

STANLEY: No, no, I can't . . . I'll do anything! Mrs. Turnbull! I said don't push me!! Leggo me ear! Leggo!

MRS. TURNBULL: THREE!

BIZ: Loud scream followed by a loud thump: alarm clock rings.

MOTHER: Now there goes the clock. If you don't get up this minute, I'll really take your ears off. Now get off that floor.

STANLEY (sleepily): Huh? What'm I doing down here?

MOTHER: You just fell off the bed, that's what!

STANLEY: Oh Mom, what an awful dream I had . . . It was a nightmare!

MOTHER: That's what you get for staying up all hours of the night doing your homework. From now on, light's out at ten.

STANLEY: But I had to do an English project, Mom.

MOTHER: No homework is so important that you lose sleep over it. NOW get up or you'll be late for school . . .

STANLEY (yawn): Okay, Mom . . . (Mrs. K, I'll never forgive you for this!)

The Dream House

There was a forgotten house,
That stood near a tremendous sea,
And in it there dwells no one,
And it satisfies no one but me.

For though it is cold and bare—
And desolate it may seem,
It shelters hopes within me,
Each but just a dream.

It faces a great, green bay,
And is below a great, blue sky,
And upon it shines a great big gun,
And I think, "How small am I."

A garden of rocks lies about it,
And in back of it stands a hill.
All can be seen from a window,
With a sea-gull on its sill.

I leave it there to stand,
And protect things dear to me;
Under a great, blue sky,
Beside a vast, green sea.

The Return

By GERALDINE BYRNE

This is the second time in the history of two great world conflicts, that this country's fighting men have experienced the undescribable happiness of a homecoming; only some of the sons, brothers and husbands came back, never knowing that they did so.

Not many days ago you witnessed a lone ship ploughing through the rough waters of New York bay on a dismal, rainy morning. Silently she saluted the "Great Lady" and berthed at a crowded pier. "But where are the bands?" you ask . . . "where are the shouts of welcome?" Well, you won't find them here, friend! You'll find tears though, and soft sobbing, a pair of glassy eyes, and even a pair of wide blue ones set in the stern face of a young child.

The sound of "scraping" chains reach your eager ears now; and there is a sort of music in them if you listen hard enough. A long box is swung grotesquely into the air and slowly comes to rest on the rain-beaten docks. There is a muffled cry from one elderly woman, and a hand shoots forth to press firmly on her trembling shoulder.

Suddenly you get the drift of things and your hat flies off your head in one swift movement, and you place it over your heart.

Box along side of box continues to fill the accorded space, and you wonder from what torn up battleground they were taken. Your memory skips back over the years to 1942. Didn't Jackie Jones recall the noisy band and ear-shattering cheers that filled the huge glass-roofed pier. There was some of the grief then that surrounds you now, but there were laughing smiling young fellows to say, "Save some turkey for me, I'll be home around Christmas," or "How can I get along over there if I can't speak a word of French?" Those little remarks brought a quivering smile that played about the corners of your mouth, and you patted him on the back and said, "We'll keep a leg just for you" or "Sis will send you some hints on how to ask for your favorite apple pie."

By now the lump in your throat has grown so large that you can hardly breathe, and you pretend to blow your nose, but in reality you're wiping away those burning tears.

You imagine then, that in anyone of those caskets out there on that pier, might be Jackie Jones! Any minute you expect to hear a familiar voice, perhaps one of the family that's standing near you, but there is only a silence that chills every bone in your body. The woman beside you is a complete stranger, but for some reason you place a comforting arm around her shoulders and hear yourself calling her "Mom!" She's someone's Mom, it doesn't matter to you which one's, because at the moment her grief seems to be the greatest in the world to you.

A faint roll of drums vibrates around your ears, and then the lone "taps" being played over a loud speaker turns your heart into a lump of stony matter that settles to your feet and anchors you where you stand.

Minutes that seem like eternity pass; soon a brief ceremony is completed and as the coffins are carried away you imagine you see the clouds part for an instant and a heavenly ray of yellow sunshine bathe the flag-draped caskets in pool of glory!

The Promised Land

By DOROTHY MATTIMORE

Far below, the churning water seemed restlessly to pull me toward the shadowy edge of the bridge to them, as though they mystically possessed life. The water in all its blackness, shrouded with despair, seemed sharply contrasted with the mythical promised land. I could have ended it all so simply, merely advancing to the railing, then up a little, and blessed freedom. Of course I'd be a coward, but what was the use of existing with no goal to shed illuminating rays upon the stony path I followed? My mind was made up, I was going to jump!

Half fearfully, half despairingly, I mounted the side, stood poised a moment with the chill night breeze beating against my body, perhaps for the last time, and jumped into the darkness.

I felt suddenly relaxed, a calm overtook me, as billowy clouds of mist ascended in grotesque spirals to carry me downwards. I seemed to hear voices, but their reproaches didn't daunt me, however, my own doubts began to as I gently landed. Perhaps the struggle in life wouldn't have been as hazardous as I anticipated, but now it was too late, for I had made my mistake and lost the gift of life.

I awoke from my nightmare as I stood alone on the bridge, realizing it had been but a trick of my imagination. Yes, the promised land was the earth, and I had been brave enough to see it, and not jump. As I walked away I thought how foolish the entire nation had been, in my despondency. I saw then that I was wet, and I gasped at this fact. The imagination plays wierd tricks, that was the only explanation, for surely mist alone could not have saturated me.

"Ridiculous!" He Replied

By LORRAINE BLAKE

"It's sloppy and ridiculous!" That's what the dentist replied as he stopped drilling. Perhaps you've already surmised what he was passing judgment on—perhaps you yourself have expressed the same opinion of "modern art."

"But," I began.

"Why this stuff called 'modern art,'" he went on, "this stuff looks like a child's scribbling, like the fellow hadn't the faintest idea of what he was doing. Rinse please."

"But," I repeated.

"Now I'm no artist—open please—never could draw a straight line, but I appreciate good art same as anyone else, and by good art I mean something I wouldn't be ashamed to hang over the mantelpiece. Give me the old masters, Rembrandt, Rubens, their paintings are fine and . . . and well, beautiful. They had something rich and . . . and stirring to give and they gave . . . not this silly senseless stuff artists are peddling today. Why, when you look at an old master, you know it instantly. You recognize his style and manner of expressing beauty. You don't have to stop a moment to figure out what the devil the picture represents. It explains itself. Am I right? Rinse please."

Now I don't like to contradict my elders, mainly because they have a peculiar habit of generally being in the right, but I found myself disagreeing strongly, so I let loose.

"Sir," I answered, "you ask, Are you right? How can I say you are right or wrong? For every person to say a thing is thus, there will appear two who will argue, and with sound reasoning, show that it is not thus. You say your shirt is white, yet there are those who claim your shirt is of no color and attempt to prove this by saying, 'Go into a dark closet and what color does your shirt become?' For all your arguing, you will still go away believing you are wearing a white shirt, and they still believing your shirt is colorless. That is what adds the spice to life."

"Now! Now! What kind of chatter is this?" he queried. "We talk of art and you run off into dark closets with spice and colorless shirts. I'll ask you again . . . would you honestly prefer a modern painting to an old master, and hang it over the mantle where everyone would see it? Maybe you ought to take it into a dark closet with some spice and my white shirt and see if you can cross-breed the two!"

At this he laughed heartily, rather pleased with his own wit.

"But surely, sir," says I, rather abashed, "isn't it obvious that each age brings about an inevitable change? Each age produces its own art just as it produces its own machines, its own language, its own mannerisms, and styles. Each age lives differently, thinks differently, and therefore the artists' subject matter constantly changes as well as his use of color. We are living in an age of experimentation. We're doing away with old customs and planting our own in their place."

Here I paused and chanced a glance at my adversary. He made no attempt to interrupt nor to continue drilling, so I continued rather elated.

"You stated your preference for Rembrandt. As a product of the seventeenth century he produced realism and played with the effects of light. Rubens interpreted the robust spirit of his age. Leonardo Da Vinci was a result of the fifteenth century; Cezanne of the nineteenth; but Cezanne couldn't have been a Da Vinci any more than a sparrow could be a canary. Yet each was a master of his time. Art expresses a period of living. We don't know who will emerge as the artist of our time. We don't even dare guess, because we're too close to it. Art must be judged from afar and weighed."

Again I paused to survey the dentist. He had swallowed every word and was digesting them in his mind. All this while the drill remained idle much to my delight. With no little amusement he asked, "To what do you attribute the causes of such utterly foolish nonsense as surrealism and abstraction?"

I was quite prepared for this and answered. "Just the other day I heard a lecture on that very topic. The speaker said that people of the present age are becoming too compact; they know too much and too quickly, so they must have a form of refuge. There remains only one thing of which man knows nothing . . . that is the supernatural . . . the world beyond. Not only do we see this longing for escape in art, we see it in literature, motion pictures, plays and photography. In creating the supernatural, man does as his fancy dictates. He creates that which is beyond belief. This becomes an outlet for his emotions and soon he almost believes in what he has created."

We talked on for a while but soon grew weary of the subject and as it was nearing the dinner hour, I suggested that he finish drilling and he did.

Just as I was leaving, I asked again for his opinion of modern art and waited breathlessly for his answer, hoping that my views had influenced him somewhat.

It didn't take him long to answer.

"Well, as I said, it's ridiculous!" he replied.

Sally Sublets

By ROSLYN KOHN

Once a year, just before school opens, I spend a few days with my cousin Sally. This year Sally was sub-letting an apartment from a girl who is an artist. The apartment is the typical artist's garret on the sixth floor. As it happened the entire sixth floor was occupied solely by artists, and all temperamental. Everything that is sane, normal, or deals with common sense reaches only to the fifth floor, then it stops. The sixth floor seceded from the rest of the building long ago.

I arrived at about two o'clock in the afternoon and was just in time for breakfast. And what a breakfast it was! Sally, who had been a dancing instructress, was giving a rumba lesson. In one corner of the room two excited artists were arguing. Suddenly in burst Rembrandt with his newest canvas. Oh pardon me, Rembrandt is a small, energetic artist who also lives on the sixth floor. From as far back as anyone can remember he was called Rembrandt and I don't believe anyone ever calls him by his real name, even if anyone knows what it is.

It was a very hot afternoon and Sally and I were comfortably seated near a window eating fruit and looking at photographs. Towards four o'clock it started to rain, and by four-thirty there was thunder and lightning and the rain was falling in torrents. We both made a dash to close the windows when we noticed that there was quite a commotion in front of the house. People were calling for help and after seeing a few familiar faces among the crowd Sally gave a moan and rushed for the stairs. In the street two men were trying to drag Rembrandt into the house. Rembrandt, paintbrush in hand, was objecting very noisily. It was such a wonderful storm that he felt he had to put it down on his canvas. It didn't seem to bother him that the rain washed away practically every stroke; it gave the canvas realism! With threats and pleas and finally the help of a policeman we got Rembrandt into the house. For two hours he kept shouting at us that we'd ruined his chef-d'oeuvre. But it wasn't serious. By the time three hours had elapsed he was busy creating a new masterpiece.

The sixth floor settled down again to its former state of semi-sanity and by this time I had to be leaving. After saying good-bye to everyone Sally and I walked to the station. We promised each other that we would spend a week together during the Christmas Holidays. However, two weeks ago I received a letter from Sally, who is now in California. But I'm not disappointed, not really. I'm still sure that next year before school opens I'll see Sally again and something will happen to keep me spinning for another year.

Gareth and Lynette

By LUCILLE BLANCHARD

SCENE: King Arthur's palace, 1947.

NARRATOR: In the days of King Arthur, he often held open court. During this time he granted boons. Favors, to you.

HERALD: Hear ye, Hear ye. Anyone having any gripes whatsoever, will now step forward or forever keep his mouth shut.

LYNETTE: Oh, Mr. Arthur, Mr. Arthur.

HERALD: Your highness, we have a lady in the balcony.

ARTHUR: Let her state her case, and tell her to make it snappy. I have to make the 6 o'clock joust at Hialeah.

LYNETTE: Oh, your highness, sir, I have a beef about a couple of knights in your kingdom. They're holding my sister prisoner in their castle. Could you please send someone to fight them and rescue her? Maybe, Joe Louis, or MacArthur, or someone.

ARTHUR: Damsel, your request is granted. Who in my court will do battle for this fair chick?

GARETH: I, your highness.

ARTHUR: And who are you?

GARETH: I, your highness, am your soda jerk.

ARTHUR: Very well, go and save this maiden's sister, but fix me a couple of banana splits first.

GARETH: Yes, your highness.

NARRATOR: Lynette, after banging her head against the wall in astonishment, said, I quote:

LYNETTE: Jerk!

NARRATOR: Unquote.

Gareth goes on his quest and is led by Lynette, whose comments were stricken from the script by the N.A.B.

LYNETTE: You dope. If you would have had sense enough to keep your big mouth shut, I might have gotten someone like Lancelot maybe, but no, you had to put your two-pence in.

NARRATOR: Still Gareth says nothing.

We forgot to mention that besides being the hero, he is also a trifle dopey. Suddenly they see the first knight he has to fight, Morning Hangover.

MORNING HANGOVER: Prepare to meet your doom!

GARETH: Prepare to meet your doom!

NARRATOR: It takes them all morning to prepare to meet their doom so it is night fall when they . . .

GARETH: Charge!

MORNING HANGOVER: Charge!

NARRATOR: And it is so dark, they miss each other completely. Gareth runs off a cliff and Morning Hangover's hopped-up jalopy runs into a tree. When Arthur hears this, he exclaims:

ARTHUR: Oh, well, another day, another knight.

NARRATOR: As for Lynette, she married a blacksmith and lived happily ever after. Her sister is still in the castle tower, playing solitaire.

Moon Dream

Every night before my sleep,
I stand at my window and gaze afar—
Up in the heavens where shines a moon,
And to the right of it twinkles a star.

As I stand and gaze in marvel,
Standing in this remarkable plight,
Nothing can remove this thought from my mind,
That there's nothing as beautiful as the night.

I think of deeds that I did in the day,
And I regret all faults that came my way,
But Old Man Moon smiles down at me,
And I chuckle my troubles away.

And sometimes a cloud appears in the sky,
Hiding the flaring star from sight.
And I think, though it's hid from me,
It still will blink each night.

So every night before my sleep,
I stand at my window and gaze afar—
Up in the heavens where shines a moon,
And to the right of it twinkles a star.

Memories

By MARVIN BERKMAN

Bill Kenny sat in the overstuffed arm chair that occupied so conspicuous a place in the family parlor. It was one of those quiet, warm, summer nights when all you want to do is stay at home with the evening newspaper and a big cool glass of milk; and that was just what Bill was doing. He took a sip of "cow juice" as he called it, and then placed the clouded glass on the table next to his chair. He leaned back into the comfortable leather, snuggled deep into the seat cushion in an attempt to arrive at a comfortable position. Finally he achieved the desired pose, then picked up the copy of Post-Dispatch; he glanced at the dull headline, and then as usual turned to the sports page.

The first article that caught his eye was an account of some high school track meet. Track was something close to the young veteran, for he too had been a high school runner. He settled down to reading the story, read past the headline, past the introduction, into the account of the races themselves. Suddenly, he raised his head, lifting his gaze from the printed sheets, to the fireplace, above which hung the Japanese Captain's Samurai Sword, the one he had brought back from the Pacific. There were two pictures on the mantelpiece; one of Bill resplendent in his Marine "dress blues," the other of his brother Bob, his big brother, who had also served, but he had not come back. It was not at the pictures that he directed his eyes, nor was it the gleaming, red tasseled sword. It was at the little gold statue of a crouching runner, the trophy that filled the central position on the mantelpiece. As he looked at the statuette, a far away look came into his eyes.

No longer was he at home. He was in the big stadium, clad in shorts and jersey, with the sun beating warmly down from above. His legs were loose and supple from the sweat running down them. He felt a vast feeling of emptiness where his stomach should have been. The legs that had been so firm just a few seconds before seemed to be wobbling like jelly, as he stood at the starting line. He took a last hurried breath as the vague figure on the sidelines barked "take your marks," felt the nervous tremor of the muscles in his calf as he pressed against the starting holes in the "set" position; felt the strained moments of waiting for the sound that would propel him down the long straightaway along which his eyes now peered so intently. The crack of the starter's gun sent him hurtling forward, towards the finish line, a scant 100 yards away. Once more he felt the cool wind blowing against his face, heard the rhythmic crunch of spikes biting in the cinders of the track, as smoothly flowing limbs beat out a tattoo of speed. The crowd roared loudly as the six runners approached the finish bunched close together, but in Bill's ears even louder rang the sound of pounding feet alongside of him. The little red string strung across the finish line suddenly loomed before him. Summoning up all the speed he could, Bill lunged forward, forward to break the tape that meant victory. The red string snapped against his chest, and then, with a shaking motion of his head, Bill was back in the parlor.

He forced his eyes away from the lithe, golden form on the mantle, slowly crumpled the newspaper into a ball, and then bitterly stared down at the trouser sleeve pinned to his right hip, the sleeve in which a leg should have been.

Fear

By BRUCE HEYER

You had a good time at the party, didn't you? You have walked the girls home and now you are starting down that long strip of road that has no lamps on it. It's awfully dark isn't it? The painfully small beams of light which your flashlight emits isn't much on this absolutely moonless, starless night, is it? The silence presses on you like the tremendous pressure excited by tons of water. What is this? You're trembling. Why?

You've walked this road many times before haven't you? Oh, I see, but not at night. You try whistling but it doesn't help. You never noticed how gloomy the Parker house looks at night did you. Over there, something moved didn't it? Run! You begin running. Fear grips your heart like an iron vice. Faster, faster. You trip over your own feet. It's chasing you. You don't know what, but it's chasing you. Faster, faster your feet fly over the ground. The front gate won't open. You make a tremendous leap over the fence and lie sprawling on the damp ground. Leaping to your feet you fling open the door and in the light of the hall, you realize what has been chasing you. Fear!

The Ivory Face

By MARVIN BERKMAN

A solitary figure plods through the drizzling rain, collar upturned in a vain attempt at warmth. The bleak grey sky offers no ray of sunshine to cut the hazy mist slowly settling over the streets, no warm beam to heat the wind-chilled body. Raindrops spatter against his battered fedora, then trickle down the low-slouched rim to fall among the tiny pools of glistening water forming on the sidewalk.

Rounding the corner he comes upon a hurrying citizen, to whom he addresses a fruitless plea for a few coins. Despondent, the forlorn creature thrusts his hands into the pockets of his trousers. Numb fingers come into contact with cold, heavy metal. A ray of light flashes across the tired face. Slowly, almost fearfully, he withdraws the object from the dark recess. Avid eyes drink in its glitter. Cold, wind, hunger, rain, all are forgotten in the delirious joy of discovery. New life is brought to the tired legs. His step quickens. The plodding walk breaks into a hurried pace which brings him nearer ever nearer, to his newly determined goal, a trio of golden spheres, hanging from an iron bar that juts from the brick building wall. At last he arrives at his destination, and throwing open the door, plunges into the shop.

The tinkle of a little bell, strung across the doortop heralds his arrival. A curtain hanging over an alcove in the rear, parts to admit a short, stocky old man, wearing a black skull cap over his thinning white hair, a toupee perched on his forehead over one eye. Taking up his position behind the counter, the shop owner casts a critical eye over the man before him, then over the article which he proffers. It is a heart of purple plastic, set into another, and slightly larger heart of gold. Inset in the former is an ivory face.

The old man counts out four bills from his wallet, then after a moment's thoughtful hesitation, adds another. An eager hand reaches forth, and withdraws the money from the table.

As the stranger leaves, bell tinkling as the door closes behind him, the merchant pauses to examine his purchase. It was not the first of its kind to come into his possession. Several years ago during the war another such award had come into his hands, though in a different manner. It had been purchased with the life's blood of his son, fallen in battle.

But this new one, somehow it seemed different. At first he could not determine why, but then it came to him. The features, the ivory face of the great man, it wore a frown. Yet, how could this be? As if to seek an answer, the old Jew lifted his head, eyes sweeping over the tiny room. His gaze passed through the rainswept glass of the door then fixed itself upon the weary figure trudging through the bleak drizzling curtain, towards the flashing neon sign which reads "Bar."

Beneath the glowing letters, slatted doors swung wide to admit the caller, then with a final movement of the hinges, swung shut.

Dwarf Heaven

By SAMUEL FORTUNATO

The crowd was a large one at the fair today. They bustled, shoved and ate so much cotton candy, that the man who sells it was heard to remark, he'd have to get a seat on the Cotton Exchange if business kept booming. The shrill cries of fearful females rang down from the heights of the "Monstrous Coaster," as that machine went into its series of dips and drops. The cries were so shrill that the crowd across from the coaster had to strain their ears to listen to the barker. There blared in gaudy letters, "Petit's Troupe of Freaks." On the platform dressed in a costume out of the Arabian Nights was the little man.

His face wore an expression of strain. Drops of moisture lined the ridge of his somewhat large nose and ever so often, under the prodding of the blazing country sun, a little gleaming ball of perspiration broke and trickled down the sides of his face. He broke into a slight smile, which was more an expression of defeat than joy, when a youngster cried, "Mama! Look at that little man! Why, I'm even bigger than him, and I'm only seven!" The mother of the little red headed tot quickly took him in hand and started in the direction of the roller coaster across the fairway. The crowd continued to gape, shove and mill about like the waters of the ocean. A tiny organ chorus of "Santa Lucia" started somewhere in the background and the barker's voice lifted an octave to compete with the new disturbance. Then, a scream rang out above the noises of the carnival. All eyes turned in its direction and gaped!

From where he stood on the platform, Petit, the dwarf saw the whole scene in an instant. The red haired boy who had gaped at him a minute or so earlier, now was walking placidly on the tracks of the "Monstrous Coaster," while his mother screamed and the coaster started down its whirlwind sweep of steel to the unsuspecting boy who stood in its path! As the rushing steel cars shot down their pathway, so did the scenes of Petit's life rush thru his brain! They all seemed to focus on one thing! People gaping! People whispering! People laughing! Trying to live in a world built for normal men!

The impish figure bolted from his perch and across the crowd in a second, his flowing costume lapping at his heels as he hurtled the fence to the tracks of the roller coaster! A last flexing of his muscles as he pushed the boy off the track, and then a sound of a dull crash as the "Coaster" caught him in its uphill run and flung him out into space! The body flew as a sack of sand would, and crashed through the sign reading, "Petit's Troupe of Freaks" to the earth below.

The vast holiday throng stood silent for a full second. So quiet in fact, that later someone was heard to remark that it was as quiet as a dwarf's heaven.

The Wind

The wind is whining in the trees,
Hustling its way to the billowing seas;
Scurrying, scattering, blowing, blown,
To distant lands to us unknown;
Mayhaps a land of palms and sands,
Or a land of snow and icy expanse,
To rustle the palms the sands to shift,
To skim the ice, the snow to sift.
No one knows where it will end—
That merry traveler the flowing wind.

MUSIC: Up and Fade.

SUE: Pst, Win, hey Win! Listen, I gotta talk to you.

WIN: Yeah Sue, what's the matter?

SUE: Why, Win, I'm practically in the throes of death. You know that man who died of smallpox the other day? Well, me, poor little me, was on the same trolley he rode on two weeks ago.

WIN: Oh, Sue, that's awful!

SUE: Win, what am I going to do? Will you miss me if I die? I'll leave you my white angora sweater which you like so much.

WIN: You poor kid! You'll have to get vaccinated right away. Jeanne was vaccinated and she said they had the cutest doctors there. I'm going to like that.

SUE: Shh! Teacher's giving us the glad eye. Meet you after school—If I'm alive, that is.

MUSIC: FADE UP AND OUT.

SUE: Well, it's about time! What happened to you?

WIN: Oh, that wildcat of a Geometry teacher of mine kept me in just because I put the right angle in the wrong place.

SUE: We'd better hurry. We're late now.

SOUND EFFECTS: Casual street sounds in the background.

WIN: Golly, I hope they don't run out of serum. That would be a catastrophe!

SUE: Catastrophe! That would be fatal! Why my very life is dependent upon that serum. It'll have to last.

WIN: Oh Sue, I was just kidding. Of course, it'll last. At least, I hope for your sake, dear.

SUE: Mmmm. You're too considerate today, Win. What do you want to borrow now?

WIN: Oh, Sue, you know that simply heavenly blue dress you wore the other night?

SUE: I thought something like this was coming. Well?

WIN: Could I please borrow it? Could I, please? Please. Jimmy saw me in all my other dresses and I simply wouldn't be seen wearing the same thing twice. It's utterly redic thinking about it.

SUE: O.K. I'll give in. But you'll have to lend me your black skirt for next Friday.

SOUND EFFECTS. Sound of crowd-ad-libbing.

SUE: Say, Win, I think this is the end of the line.

WIN: At the rate it's moving we might be through by ten tonight, I'm having a Math test and I gotta study! Dad said if I flunk this one he'll cut my allowance for a month, and then what'll I do?

SUE: Boy! Am I glad I didn't take Math this term. That French is giving me enough of a headache. Say, Win, do you feel hot? I feel kinda funny.

WIN: Well, it is hot out, and thinking about tomorrow doesn't make me feel so good either. Hey, you'd better stop those afternoon sundaes for a while, Sue. Your skin is beginning to break out again.

SUE: I know. But say, Win, look at that gorgeous hunk of law enforcing man. That's what I. . . .

WIN: Yeah, he's cute. Say, Sue, what time is it? My watch stopped.

SUE: Well, mine did, too, starting this instant. Let's ask that adorable policeman.

WIN: Excuse me, madame, could you please watch our places? We'll be back in a minute.

WOMAN: Yes, but hurry up.

SUE: Oh, Officer, could you please tell us. . . .

POLICEMAN: Say, kid, what's the matter with your face?

SUE: Why, what's the matter?

POLICEMAN: Your face. You'd better come with me, so the Doc can take a look at it. It looks queer to me.

SUE: Queer? What do you mean? Oh, I must have. . . . I'm sure I have. . . . Oh, Win (begins to cry). It's smallpox. I've got the smallpox.

SOUND EFFECTS: Fade out of crying as sound of crowd ad libbing "smallpox," etc., is faded in.

JUDY: Smallpox! Who? When? Where?

WOMAN: That girl over there. The one that's crying.

JUDY: Why that's Sue Carter. Oh, golly! I'd better run and tell her mother. Poor Sue!

SOUND EFFECTS. Door bell ringing persistently. Sound of door opening.

JUDY: (Gasping for breath.) Oh, Mrs. Carter—Sue, it's Sue.

MRS. CARTER: What's the matter with Sue, Judy? Oh, she's been run over. I know she's been run over. Oh, oh. I knew it would happen. She never looked where she was going when she crosses the street. Where. . . .

JUDY: She wasn't run over, Mrs. Carter. It's worse than that. Sue has the smallpox!

MRS. CARTER: Smallpox! Oh my poor baby.

JUDY: You'd better sit down, Mrs. C. I know how you feel. She was one of my best friends.

MUSIC: REACHES CLIMAX. THEN FADES OUT:

SOUND EFFECTS: Bring in sound of cars and honking horns.

MRS. CARTER: (Sobbing) She was always such a good girl, Jim.

MR. CARTER: There, there, it isn't as bad as all that.

MRS. CARTER: She gave me two beautiful handkerchiefs with my initials on them. She borrowed the money from you and and. . . hysterical crying.

MR. CARTER: Take it easy, dear. She's going to be all right.

MRS. CARTER: How can you be so calm about it all? Why for all we know she may be going to——.

MRS. CARTER: Don't even say such a thing.

PAUSE:

MR. CARTER: Here's the hospital, Mary. Now pull yourself together, everything is going to be all right.

SOUND EFFECTS. MOTOR SHUT. . . . RUSHING FOOTSTEPS. . . . OFF. . . . CAR DOORS SLAMMING. DOOR OPENING.

NURSE: May I help you?

MRS. CARTER: Where's our daughter?

MRS. CARTER: I want to see my poor baby. Where is she?

NURSE: I'll have to know her name before I can help you.

MR. CARTER: Why, yes, of course, you do. It's Sue. Susan Carter.

NURSE: You must mean the girl . . .

MRS. CARTER: Yes, that's her. That's our daughter.

NURSE: I think you'd better see Doctor Edwards first. Just go straight down this corridor and then turn left. His is the third door on the right.

MR. CARTER: Come on, Mary. Hurry!

SOUND EFFECTS: Hurrying footsteps and in background typical hospital noises.

MR. CARTER: What did she say his name was, Honey? Jenkins? Horton?

MRS. CARTER: I think it was Edwards. Yes, here it is—Doctor Paul Edwards — Dermatologist. What's dermatologist mean, Jim? She must be very sick to have doctor with such a big name. (Starts to cry again.)

MR. CARTER: Well, let's not just stand here. We have to face it sooner or later.

SOUND EFFECTS: DOOR OPENING.

MRS. CARTER: Dr. Edwards?

DR. EDWARDS: Yes?

MRS. CARTER: Where's our daughter?

DR. EDWARDS: Was she brought in today?

MRS. EDWARDS: Yes, of course, she was. We're Mrs. and Mr. Carter.

DR. EDWARDS: Carter? Oh, the one Officer Brady brought in.

MRS. CARTER: A policeman? Oh, Jim, Sue must be very sick if a policeman had to carry her in.

DR. EDWARDS: Oh, it wasn't anything like that. But I must warm you. She isn't very pretty to look at now.

MR. CARTER: Of course, we understand. We'll try not to excite her. How is she taking it, Doc?

DR. EDWARDS: She's not too upset, through she is a little unhappy about her looks. You know how kids of her age are.

MRS. CARTER: My little girl. So, so brave! Is there any hope, Dr. Edwards?

DR. EDWARDS: Hope! Of course, there is, even though her case of measles is pretty bad.

MR. AND MRS. CARTER: (Together) MEASLES!!!!

DR. EDWARDS: Why, what did you think she had? Smallpox?

MRS. CARTER: Ohhhhhhhhhhh!

MR. CARTER: Mary, speak to me. Doctor, help me. My wife's fainted!

MUSIC: Fade down and out.

SUE: Mom, Dad! Boy am I glad to see you! Golly, Mom, don't look so sad.

MR. CARTER: Sad? Oh, Sue!! You don't know what we just went through.

MRS. CARTER: My poor baby!

SUE: I'm going to be all right, Mom. Why I'll probably be out of here in two weeks. I certainly don't mind being here. You should see my doctor! Hubba hubba! Win doesn't want to leave. Hey, Win, why so quiet?

WIN: Oh, I don't know, Sue. I just feel kinda funny.

SUE: (Laughing.) Maybe you've got the measles, too.

WIN: I already had them, thank goodness!

SUE: Too bad, Win. Er, goodbye, everybody, guess it's time for you to go. The doctor will be back any second now.

WIN: We caught your subtle hint,
Sue. You don't have to throw us out bodily!

SUE: 'Bye, Mom and Dad. Don't worry now. I'll be home before you two even have a chance to miss me.

MUSIC: Fade out.

SOUND EFFECTS: Telephone ringing.

SUE: Hello, that you, Win?

WIN: (Through a filter mike.) Yeah, it's me.

SUE: You know what, Win? The doctor said I could go home tomorrow.

I haven't got a mark left on my face. Isn't that wonderful. Oh, and by the way, Win, could I borrow your black skirt for Friday night?
Jack asked me to go skating with him.

WIN: Sure you can have it, Sue.
But I won't be needing your blue dress for quite a while. I've got the chickenpox!

MUSIC: COMING TO CLIMAX! Fade out.

The Moon

Behind a tree it starts its climb,
A gleam of light shoots thru the trees.
And the winds sigh mournfully—
As it scatters the dead Autumn leaves.

Climbing slowly, but without a stop,
Through the rain clouds in the sky,
Why does it climb without a stop—
Trying to reach the stars up high?

The trees try to hold it within their grasp,
But it slides out of their reach,
And still the branches try to reach higher,
But the wind takes possession of each.

It blows them all back in place,
While the moon glides high in the night,
Pushing away all the clouds,
Yet giving its remarkable light.

Finally it reaches its destination,
And satisfied it has flown so high,
Amidst the shivering, bright stars,
It falls downward to the breezes sigh.

Behind a tree it ends its fall,
A gleam of light shoots thru the trees.
And the winds sigh mournfully—
As it scatters the dead Autumn leaves.

Spring: Plain and Fancy

By IRENE NEEDLEMAN

As you step out into the street one fine day in April your breath catches and your eyes are wide in wonder at the miracle that Spring has performed. From the drab lifeless place the world had been, it is transformed into a bright, shining, beautiful paradise. The lawns about you are covered by a thick green velvet carpet of newly formed grass. The avenues are lined with straight, tall, slender trees that hold out their green bedecked arms. You then become aware of the gorgeous spring blossoms; the blushing rosebuds, the black-eyed pansies and the simple but very lovely bluebells all forming a dazzling riot of color. However, that which makes the picture complete is the warm golden sun which bathes the whole earth in its brilliant light.

Again you marvel at the transformation and walk out into the glorious spring day.

This is the poet's conception of Spring, however, in the following paragraph I shall relate what really happens on a fine spring day; and this is taken from experience.

I walked along the street that afternoon on my way to the bus stop. As I walked I noticed it was beginning to turn dark and as it was only three o'clock I knew it couldn't be turning dark naturally so I hesitantly glanced up at the sky. This confirmed my suspicions. It was going to rain. The sky was black with storm clouds and flashes of lightning streaked menacingly across the sky. I began to run, thinking only of saving my new dress and hairdo from being soaked. Suddenly, there was a great crash of thunder and the heavens opened up and let fall torrents of rain on the scurrying people below. As I ran, I felt drops of water pouring down my face, and I had a sensation that my dress was beginning to shrink. With every step (I should say leap) that I took, mud splattered over my glistening white (which were far from that now) shoes and stockings. I ran still faster and at last reached the bus stop and boarded the bus. The girl with the wet stringy hair, the shrunken dress and shoes that oozed water with every step, that got on the bus was quite a change from the shining, clean girl I had been that morning. I was one of the unlucky individuals who had been out on a spring day.

and a glittering light in a darkening room, to which I reach in vain with my mind and my heart. Teachers have shown me what I should be, what I want to be. Teachers, as I see them are lonely paths to glory.

Here Lie

By STEVE SELTZER

It was called Spoon Valley because of its oval, spoon-like shape. At the north end where the river leaped from the worn cliffs, the Township of Spoon Valley was established, dating back to the Revolutionary War. It was the honored dead of that war who were first laid to rest in the Spoon Valley Cemetery, located at the southern end of the valley where the river disappeared underground, almost a mile from the town.

Now, a cemetery in a small town is an odd phenomenon. The living come and pass away and the town grows slowly, if at all. But there is no leaving the land of the dead. The travelers there remain forever. And thus their resting place grows crowded, and the dead cry out for room. So it is easy to see that in narrow Spoon Valley, after one hundred and fifty years, the conflict 'twixt the living and the dead must grow serious, and need some wise, yet convenient, solution.

It was to provide such a solution that a meeting of the citizens of Spoon Valley had been called in the church, which served in time of crisis as a town hall. In spite of the stormy night the church was full, and the human excitement within often approached the pitch of the tumult of nature without. Suddenly the church doors flew open and a frail, dripping woman burst into the meeting.

"The lightning!" she screamed. "My barn! It's struck my barn! Help me . . ."

A hush descended on the crowd, and there was a gradual movement toward the door, after the pleading woman. (The modern fire equipment of Spoon Valley was non-existent, and any fire which survived the fierce torrent of rain was unlikely to be tamed by the buckets of the voluntary fire department. Nevertheless something might be done.)

Teachers

By MONA CONWAY

For nearly twelve years I have observed teachers. All sorts of teachers. Short ones and tall ones, thin ones and stout ones. Some have been conservative and others frivolous, or radical in their ideas. There was one teacher in grammar school whom I particularly remember. She was, first of all, a lady. "Her voice was ever soft and gentle and low, an excellent thing in a woman." I cannot remember her even raising her voice in reprimand, nor was she ever anything but gentle to anyone she came in contact with. Yet she was an excellent teacher. In her gentle way she held the small minds of her pupils in her two soft hands, and filled them with bits and scraps of knowledge essential for us all. I still remember the way she taught us fractions. It was she who taught me respect and tolerance for other people.

Yet all my teachers were not as kind as she was. There was another teacher, also in grammar school, of whom I was both mentally and physically afraid. Each schoolday was filled with an unconquerable dread of her. She taught me to hate school, and it wasn't until after I entered high school that I again realized the teacher was on my side.

Speaking generally, my teachers have been essentially the same. Yet, their personalities were each different, in small ways, if not in larger ways. But they have all been understanding in their teaching; have all known when to be lenient, when to be stern, have all let me form my own opinions, even though they might have disagreed, and then shown me where I was wrong.

Not in an "I told you so" manner, but as one friend to another.

I've often thought of what a teacher must be thinking as she looked down at her pupils. During an exam, when the room is quiet and deceptively restful, does she look through the monotonous lake of faces and think of what she will cook for supper that evening, or the new movie on the avenue?

Or does she think of the pupils, and wonder what they will be when they graduate. Will they be successful doctors and lawyers, writers and businessmen? It is here, the next State Senator is quietly taking a midterm, or maybe the District Attorney of a few years hence? Does she wonder, sometimes, seeing all those bent heads, if it is worth the trouble to be a teacher? Maybe she could have been a brilliant political figure, or a second Pavlova. Maybe she would have liked to be a blues singer in some obscure cafe. But here she is, in the roomful of busy minds and eager or reluctant pens. Does she think of anything but the assignment she'll give next week?

Teachers, to me, are an enigma. Why do they go on, day after day, when in the end they begin all over again, with a new set of boys and girls, a new set of problems, new minds to deal with? Don't they ever tire of being with minds smaller than their own all day long? How can they follow a daily routine with no thanks from those they teach, with nothing more than a satisfaction in their hearts, and a small paycheck? Although I've known teachers for the better part of the years I've lived, they are still a problem to me. A problem, and a glittering light in a darkening room, to which I reach in vain with my mind and my heart. Teachers have shown me what I should be, what I want to be. Teachers, as I see them are lonely paths to glory.

It was called Spoon Valley because of its oval, spoon-like shape. At the north end where the river leaped from the worn cliffs, the Township of Spoon Valley was established, dating back to the Revolutionary War. It was the honored dead of that war who were first laid to rest in the Spoon Valley Cemetery, located at the southern end of the valley where the river disappeared underground, almost a mile from the town.

Now, a cemetery in a small town is an odd phenomenon. The living come and pass away and the town grows slowly, if at all. But there is no leaving the land of the dead. The travelers there remain forever. And thus their resting place grows crowded, and the dead cry out for room. So it is easy to see that in narrow Spoon Valley, after one hundred and fifty years, the conflict 'twixt the living and the dead must grow serious, and need some wise, yet convenient, solution.

It was to provide such a solution that a meeting of the citizens of Spoon Valley had been called in the church, which served in time of crisis as a town hall. In spite of the stormy night the church was full, and the human excitement within often approached the pitch of the tumult of nature without. Suddenly the church doors flew open and a frail, dripping woman burst into the meeting.

"The lightning!" she screamed. "My barn! It's struck my barn! Help me . . ."

A hush descended on the crowd, and there was a gradual movement toward the door, after the pleading woman. (The modern fire equipment of Spoon Valley was non-existent, and any fire which survived the fierce torrent of rain was unlikely to be tamed by the buckets of the voluntary fire department. Nevertheless something might be done.)

The group arrived at the river in time to see the flaming barn collapse on the edge of the bank, sway, and finally topple with a roaring hiss into the rain-swollen current. The men raced along the river searching by torchlight for the wreckage. As they drew near the valley's southern extreme, they found themselves splashing through mud and water. When they arrived at the cavern into which the river disappeared, they found that the current had sucked the boards and tons of hay into the narrow tunnel, and they now formed an impenetrable barrier choking the river, and flooding the valley. The party retraced its steps, to find the river overflowing into the gutters of the town, and the women packing necessities to flee the valley. But the steady downpour, the choked river, and the streams flowing down from the surrounding hills had washed all roads away, loosened all footholds, and left only the bare, sheer, damp cliffs blocking all escape. The raging flood swept houses away, uprooted trees and wrenched from the earth the buried dead. The citizens of Spoon Valley huddled against the base of the cliffs, and waited. The spoon was slowly filling and they could not climb the rim.

The misty morning broke on a bizarre scene, in which death was dominant. Spoon Valley was a peaceful lake. An occasional roof-top peered from below the placid surface. Bodies could be seen floating near the cliffs. Drifting aimlessly about were the conquerors, visitors from the far past, more discreetly enclosed in long narrow boxes. The problem of Spoon Valley was settled without councils or meetings. The transient living had surrendered to the eternal dead, and there was none to dispute their claim.

The River

Don't hurry, beautiful river,
Don't hurry to the sea,
You won't be happy there at all,
For you'll forgotten be.
Don't hurry, beautiful river,
You'll always have to roam,
To be lost within the great, wide sea,
And never find a home.
Oh, linger, beautiful river,
Oh linger, here by me,
I love your peace so very much,
Don't hurry to the sea.

My Secret Ambition

By GWENDOLYN FORTUNE

Paxella Freeman

My secret ambition is to run the world—to rule every inch of it. To own the oceans and dictate the action of every flea and machine. My first act will be to make the world lighter and brighter. The nights of the Western world will be illuminated by flaming Regents papers. Proctors will hang by their thumbs for two hours, authors of the tests indefinitely. All ink will be discharged into a gigantic natural hollow. (Let's say Ebbet's Field; the holes can be repaired with chewing gum.) And all teachers must swim in it daily from 8:40 until 3 P.M., with a slight intermission sixth period—(approximately too long after the customary 12 o'clock) for a diet of literary paste and broiled chalk with mushroom sauce.

Termites will be militarized for the task of clearing otherwise useful schoolrooms of desks. The floors of the rooms will then be planted with grass and an occasional daisy or cornflower. Books cannot be wasted and will be distributed equally among children wishing to make paper airplanes, paper boats to sail in the rain puddles, or to be wadded up for ammunition.

School orchestras which receive "certificates of demerit" for distinguished discord shall serenade the pedagogues inhabiting the inky natatorium.

None of my plans shall be executed autocratically, however. My plan for evacuating the hotels to make room for the alley-cats who have been so patient and now would like to change places and see how people like cellars and alleys, for instance, is very democratic. A vote will be taken among the Alaskan reindeer of Santa Claus to determine the wish of the majority.

I shall make full use of parliamentary procedure among my executives whom I will choose from pedigreed dachshunds only.

I should like to think up more tortures for the people responsible for my losing weight through perspiration on this mental rack, but it is totally unnecessary, for in a very few minutes I shall rise and leave—scot free. And I know that they shall have to read—pay attention to and sweat over thousands of these scrawled dissertations on topics from tortured students. Thousands of them, I say—Thousands!

Therefore, although I have confidence in the success of my secret ambition—even if I fail, heads I win—tails you lose, Mr. Regents.

Who's Who

BLAKE, LORRAINE, graduated from Manual in June 1947. "Ridiculous" was written in Miss Auwerda's English 8 as a class assignment. Lorraine was a member of the Weekly Staff.

BLANCHARD, LUCILLE (8-3) penned "Gareth and Lynette" on a regular midterm exam in Mrs. Kirchman's Radio English in her 7th term. Lucille has had three other contributions printed in the Prospect. She is graduating in three and one-half years.

TO MY LITTLE SPOILED BRAT
I write these simple lines for thee
Whenever you see them think of me.
May our being together never part
Because I've loved you from the start
I hope that this will not mean to you
Just a little writing of blue
But deep down in my heart
I want to say, very much,

I Love You

Always.
